Dear Dana,
I know that others are probably upset and you might be getting a barrage of emails. However let me contribute my thoughts as a NY constituent. I recently started a company in a niche bitcoin commodity market. Its a small business but we are growing, only about 12 of us. I pay salaries in the range of 100-200k. I expect to employ over 100 people by this time next year.
The problem is I have no room for error misconduct or knee jerk reactions from a state government as we are in critical phase of our development. Since my close proximity to the border I simply choose the safest option for the sake of myself and my employees. We physically moved out of New York. We are nimble enough that the move was easy.
Our lives are a little less stress full here in Massachusetts.
If there is any advise you need from a business owner let me know.

Tony
