

Dear Supernintendo Lawsky,

I am a high school senior-- next year I'll be attending college. I am interested in entrepreneurship and business, and up until hearing of your "BitLicense" scheme, considered schools in New York.

As a potential (and current) businessman, the financial cost of complying with your overly-broad and poorly-worded proposal frightens me.

As a civil libertarian the destruction of privacy appalls me.

I've taken the time to read much of the "BitLicense" proposal. The author either lacks a basic understanding of what Bitcoin is, or is a fascist. Whether or not it becomes "law," the "regulators" of New York have proven themselves to be either incompetent or anti-innovation.

Looking forward to the next AMA, you guys sure are hip and with it!

-Jeremiah