Hi,

I am a supporter of digital currencies, and hope to see them used much more in the future.

The regulations you're proposing extend way beyond federal regulations which are already in place for identifying large transactions of digital currencies as well as conventional currencies.

It is my opinion you should treat digital currencies as you would cash money, especially at the local retailer level. When you start capturing the names addresses, phone numbers, etc.. on cash transactions, then you can consider capturing that information for small digital currency transactions. It is unreasonable, and creates severe trade restrictions on the small retail store, which will hinder their competitiveness in business.

Thank you,
