

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

Good morning Mr. Lawsky,

I'm an Spanish citizen, a lawyer, and also an old Bitcoin evangelist. Regarding the BitLicense I have a modest suggestion, as probably these rules will be taken as a template in many other countries.

As an admirer of the american culture and liberty, I would love to see your country taking a conservative approach, one that will allow blockchain technology develop it's full potential.

Bitcoin is only an optional money, and most consumers are now aware of the risks associated to this incipient and promising technology, so there's not an imminent need to force top consumer protection rules at this moment.

Hope you can come up with something that will make us (non Americans) feel proud of such a great nation. As Roger Cohen wrote in an outstanding op-ed in the NYT called "Spirit of America" America, alone among nations, is an idea; and that idea dies when hope and possibility disappear.

Best regards,

Jaime Núñez
Madrid, Spain