Dear Superintendent Lawsky and General Counsel Syracuse,

My main concern with the bitlicense is that it will cause businesses to centralize their customer's personal information when a major benefit to bitcoin usage is that it solves identity theft by not requiring people to share their personal information. This is exactly what we shouldn't be doing. If JP Morgan with all their resources can't protect my private information, I really don't see how anyone will under the current system.

Allow bitcoin to hand you the solution on a silver platter.

Sincerely,

David Henson
